SOCIALISM

When in the course of human events the inevitable combination of business firms and corporations sets in with a rush, when charters of trusts by the hundreds were being issued every month, when amounts of capitalization in ten figures began to be familiar, many writers and speakers predicted a rapid and great growth of socialism, and not a few good citizens feared that the day of the commune was at hand. There has been an increase of paternalism, and socialism, in a broad sense of the word, has been invigorated by the great changes in the manner of conducting business that the last few years have brought about. Competition has been checked to an enormous extent, especially in manufactures and transportation. But the commune is not at hand. While it is a fact that the commune would be a logical development of the abolition or repression of the individual, a tendency to carry collectivism to that extent is not apparent. In Great Britain, far more than in the United States, socialistic ideas are affecting legislation, but the British are not ready to apply the communistic theory in government. The New York Evening Post in a recent editorial said:

"There is no sound reason for being afraid of socialism. It has doubtless come to stay in the political world, as it always has been in the world of political speculation. It will have its times of ebb and its times of flow. Men of warm benevolence will adhere to it, as will youthful enthusiasts. It will also continue to number embittered men among its supporters, with social levels of all kinds. But it can never abuse any political power which it may win without at once provoking a reaction, and a union against it of the kind Prince Buelow describes, and so defeating itself. And, as every fair-minded student of our public life must admit, the Socialist party has its lessons and its warnings for other political parties. It has a program both idealistic and utilitarian, and is a standing rebuke to those partisans who think of offices as a good in themselves, not as a means of doing the public business efficiently and benefitting the community. No sensible man will let socialism alarm him; but if it can teach him anything, why, what is he here for except to learn? As between Bourbon and Socialist, the choice might not favor the former."

Experiments in communism have been tried in many countries and in many generations. Nearly all of them have been abandoned. The Founder of Christianity was, for a time, the head of a commune.

With His divine word He executed His sentence of death upon Ananias and Sapphira for lying and cheating the community composed of his followers. He said they had lied to the Holy Ghost. In all of the European countries socialistic experiments have failed. In the United States Brook Farm was the most interesting socialistic or communistic experiment that has occurred. In brains and character the people who constituted that family were the cream of citizenship, the salt of the earth. In Posey county, Indiana, on the lower Wabash, a German named Rapp established a community in the very early part of the last century. Byron, in "Don Juan," makes characteristic mention of it. Rapp sold out to Owen, the distinguished ancestor of the Owens now residing in that state. He started a community on a very different plan from that of his predecessor. It seemed to flourish for a time, yet before many years it was wound up, but it left a good report as to intellectual and moral progress. The Oneida community in the state of New York, according to authentic statements published some forty years ago, had no attractions for healthy minded people. The Shakers are still flourishing in a small way—that is to say, they are making money and are good citizens. But as they prohibit marriage they do not increase in numbers except by taking in members from the outside. They are careful to obey the laws and to pay taxes. In the last thirty or forty years there has been a falling off in the membership of all communistic bodies in the United States, and new organizations of that sort have not appeared.

PIMA COUNTY BAD
MAN NOT SO BAD

Jim Dewar, Who Terrorized Carbonate Mining Camp and Had the Population Bluffed, Readily Submits to Arrest and Is Taken to Tucson for Trial.

Jim Dewar, the alleged "bad man" who has been terrorizing the Red Carbonate camp, two miles from Silver Bell, for some time past, was brought into town this morning by Deputy Sheriff Tom Mills and placed in the county jail. Dewar will be arraigned at 4 o'clock this afternoon by Judge Scott, says the Tucson Citizen.

The complaint against Dewar was sworn to by a Mr. Arnold, who is connected with the Red Carbonate camp, who stated to Justice of the Peace Scott when the warrant was issued that the man had been creating a disturbance in the camp almost daily.

When Mills, with the warrant in his pocket, arrived at the camp he was told that Dewar was a bad man to handle and was warned to be on his guard, as the man was a tricky proposition. Mills agreed to be careful and started after his man, whom he soon located. The warrant was served and Mills told Dewar to get his things in readiness to make the return trip. Dewar evidently didn't like the idea of being brought to Tucson under arrest and would probably have become unruly if Deputy Mills hadn't at once informed him of just what would happen if he created a disturbance. Seeing that he could not bluff the officer, Dewar got his things in readiness for the journey and when everything had been prepared meekly informed the officer that he was ready.

People in the camp informed Deputy Mills that Dewar had in the past few days whipped the engineer and several of the miners who did not jump at his beck and call, and in various other ways made a nuisance of himself.

Deep Sea Fishing with a Kite

There are fish stories and fish stories, but the one told by Edward Wilson, a clerk in the bureau of revision of taxes, to his friends in the office upon his return recently from a week spent at Ocean City, would appear to be a record breaker. On his junket Clerk Wilson was accompanied by a 10-year-old nephew, whose chief possession was a huge box kite, with which the lad each evening amused himself while at the seashore. One evening Wilson, according to his story, saw the lad flying the kite, which had been driven by a contrary wind far out to sea. Being of an inventive frame of mind, the city employee decided that by attaching a line and baited hook to the kite he might be able to do a little deep sea fishing from the shore. He accordingly called on the lad to bring in his kite, and with-out the loss of any time attached to it a fifty-foot line, on the end of which he attached an attractive bait. When the kite had risen to a sufficient height he cast line and bait into the ocean, somewhat in the manner that fly fishers for trout and bass employ. Hardly had the line had time to sink beneath the waves when the youngster felt a tug at his kite and, hastily pulling in, what was his surprise to find the assistance of his uncle, and a ten-pound blue fish! Although Wilson has been laughed at for his peculiar yarn, he insists that, it is true, and backs up his assertion by the statement of his small nephew, who is proud of the catch.—Philadelphia Record.

Roosevelt Being Closely Guarded

Genuine alarm is felt in government circles here over the safety of President Roosevelt, and it has become known that extraordinary measures have been taken to protect him from any crank or person crazed as a result of the unrest in different parts of the country or the criticism of the administration by Wall street interests. An important government official returned here today from New York and openly expressed alarm over the situation. He said the man who had been caught in the decline of the stock market was the one to fear.

So close is the watch kept on Mr. Roosevelt at present that he cannot come out on the veranda of his summer home in Oyster Bay without being under the eyes of half a dozen secret service men. Two lines of detectives surround Sagamore Hill night and day, and when the president goes bathing no one is permitted to approach within several hundred yards of the beach. Next week he is to visit Provincetown, Mass. He will be guarded while there by a small army of secret service men and also a body of marines. Already detectives are in Provincetown and every stranger arriving there is the object of investigation until the detectives are satisfied as to his business.—New York Press.

ARIZONA PRINTER WILL TOUR WORLD

H. P. Cowley, Well Known Pressman, Will Start for Hawaii in Few Weeks and Circle the Globe Before Returning—Will Travel "Light."

After visiting every state in the Union and working in more than one town in all of them, besides visiting his native Scotland several times, H. J. Cowley, one of the best known newspaper pressmen in the west, left last evening for Denver, from where he will shortly start on a hobo trip around the world, which he expects to take more than three years to accomplish in the manner he desires, says the Bisbee Miner.

Leaving Denver in about three weeks, after spending that time with his sister, Cowley will go to the west coast and from there take boat for the Hawaiian islands, working his passage over. From there to the Philippines, then the Orient, Australia, across Russia through Europe and back to America. He will carry with him a small sum of money for emergencies, but aside from a small kit of indispensables, will travel "light."

He will make the entire journey alone, not caring to take a traveling companion along, past experience in hobo trips showing him that a traveling companion is only to be chosen after long knowledge of the man and his character.

Cowley is an old-timer in this section and has numbers of friends who will be interested in the outcome of his trip and who will wish him godspeed on his journey. It is his intention after making this tour of the world, he states, to settle in some portion of the country, but he cannot rest contented until he has seen the world with its foreign scenes and sights which have moved men through ages. He has been deliberating on the trip for some time and has the jaunt down to a fine point of calculation, having figured on his exact route and the time it will take him to make the whole journey under ordinary circumstances.

A Big Show Coming

One of the best shows ever seen in Globe will be given at the Iris Monday night.

Circumstantial Evidence

It is not necessarily great eloquence or wisdom that gives a lawyer influence over men's minds; the happy knack of telling a homely story with a "point" at just the auspicious moment has saved many a losing side. The world-wide exemplar of this is, of course, Abraham Lincoln, but he has had a multitude of followers.

The late George Vest of Missouri was once defending a young man from the charge of larceny. The evidence against him was purely circumstantial, but strong. Vest claimed that no man should be convicted upon circumstantial evidence alone.

"Why," he said, "when I was a boy, I knew another lad who, while his parents were absent, went to the pantry and nearly devoured a large custard pie. Then, fearing the consequences, he looked about for means of hiding the traces of his guilt.

"Seeing the cat, he took her, smeared her face and paws with the custard, and then, taking the innocent criminal into the back yard, he shot her. As he did so the boy observed to me, 'There goes one more victim of circumstantial evidence.'"

What won the case.—New York Times.

Moose Broken to Harness

Edward Crossman of Ely, Minn., owns one of the oldest teams in America. He succeeded last winter in breaking a pair of moose to drive in harness. In his sleigh Mr. Crossman spun about as rapidly behind these animals as if drawn by horses.

The moose were captured at Bear Island Lake, a few miles to the southwest of Ely, five years ago. The mother had been killed by an Indian, and a trapper in the neighborhood, hearing the dog barking, hurried to the spot, where he found two moose calves. Mr. Crossman bought these calves from the trapper and secured a permit from the governor to keep them in his possession.

At first the moose did not like the idea of being hitched up and they made a great fuss, but being young they took to it sooner than if they had been full grown. The problem of feeding the moose was no small one. At first Crossman fed them willow twigs and young birch, but this became a difficult task, for they required about three wagon loads a week.

Today they eat hay, turnips and cabbage and seem to enjoy the diet. One of the moose will eat as much as two horses. They nibble at something most of the time, except when lying down in the middle of the day. Each moose weighs about 850 pounds.—Eldora (Iowa) Dispatch to New York World.

Alcohol Did the Trick
"Several weeks ago," said R. W. Alford, of Dayton, Ohio, at the Maxwell, "a man in my city captured a big cockroach. It was one of those kind that will stand up and fight a man. After its capture the question of killing it in the most humanitarian way was decided upon. Formalin, which is considered to be the best insecticide, was first tried, but this had little effect on the big roach. It swam around in the fluid as if it had been pure water. The roach was next placed in carbolic acid, but even this failed to kill him. A bottle of alcohol was secured and the stuff poured over the roach. The big bug straightened out its legs, quivered for a moment or so, and then fell over dead. The alcohol did the trick."—Nashville Tennessean.
